The deadly blue

sp. The sun, which beamed all ^{over} the sage shallows, glistened on the lapis lazuli waters of paradise island. The man relaxed in his canoe, basking lazily. Beneath the calm, gentle waves, coral grew and made a home for every little creature; every little sign of life was glistening in its own tiny way. It was perfect.

The marine beast swam towards the shore. Unnoticed. Unseen. Completely out of sight. Before it reached the shore, it turned, picking up a yes saint but fish now scent. It began to quicken its pace.

The man, smiling merrily, closed his eyes in peace. His banana yellow canoe drifted slowly out to sea. He had truly seized the day. The schools of fish, ^{who} swam this way and that way, sensed danger and hurried into their coral homes. This is a quite spot the man thought to himself, time to take a dip.

For a moment all movement seemed to slow and all smells disappeared. The fish turned; But but ^{there} it was again the same scent as before. Stronger ^{than} than before.

Calmly. Calmly the man pushed his canoe to the side and plunged into the depth. Fish, who nestled amongst the rocks, stared at the man blankly. Back on paradise island, the ^{idyllic} ~~idyllic~~ land the ^{the man's wife} women and ^{his} her child were eating their picnic when they saw an empty boat and a dorsal fin break the water.

The scent was stronger than ever now. It could see it's prey. Sneakily the fish stopped in the crystal clear waters. It saw an chance. It pounced.
